HINTS FROM THE ESSAY WRITING JUDGES

Carefully read the Judging Criteria below before beginning your essay. Judges look for organization and persuasiveness in essays. Begin your entry with a strong thesis clearly stated in the first paragraph, then follow through logically, smoothly, and persuasively to support that thesis. Use your own ideas and avoid clichés or generalizations that are not supported by examples or illustrations. Quotes are a good way to support a thesis but should be used sparingly; the judges are interested in what you have to say. Careful attention should be given to organization. Judges also look at the technical merits of the piece. Writing should be in the third person unless you have a specific reason for using first or second person. The essay should be neat and free of typing, spelling, grammar, and punctuation errors. Be careful not to go over the length limit. It would not be equitable for judges to allow you more space than they allow your competitors. Finish with a strong, persuasive closing statement. Consult handbooks on writing for further suggestions.
